

Celia Kaplan, DrPH

Dr. Kaplan is a professor within the Division of General Internal Medicine (DGIM) in the Department of Medicine at the University of California, San Francisco (UCSF). Born and educated in Argentina, she obtained advanced degrees in the U.S. In her career as a public health researcher, she has focused her research on the processes and outcomes of medical care for minority populations. She joined the Center for Aging in Diverse Communities (CADC) in 2008, and is currently the Director of the Community Core and an active participant with the Investigator Development Core.

She has extensive experience conducting epidemiological, health services, and intervention health research among diverse populations, with an emphasis on Latino populations. Her expertise in analyzing both qualitative and quantitative data allows her to produce numerous publications assessing individual, community, and system factors associated with health indicators. She has conducted a number of studies testing and evaluating health interventions and participation in clinical trials, particularly among diverse communities.
